Farm for Sale

THE Farm in the southeast part of the town of Shoreham, of late the home place of William G. Williamson, deceased, is offered for sale. This farm is supposed to contain 147 acres, consisting of meadow, pasture, and wood-land, in desirable proportion. The dwelling-house has lately been thoroughly repaired and modernized; and is neat, convenient, comfortable and commodious. The out-buildings, though not new, are in fair condition, and entirely ample for the wants of the farm. The farm is well fenced, and has upon it a young, thrifty and bearing orchard. This is a fine opportunity for any one desiring a good home and a farm with more desirable and fewer objectionable features, than the average of farms. If desired, easy terms of payment will be granted. For price and other particulars, inquire on the premises, of

HISTORY OF RASSELAS, PRINCE OF ABYSSINIA.

CHAPTER XLIV.

The dangerous prevalence of Imagination.

"Disorders of intellect," answered Inlæc, "happen much more often than superficial observers will easily believe. Perhaps, if we speak with vigorous exactness, no human mind is in its right state. There is no man whose imagination does not sometimes predominate over his reason, who can regulate his attention wholly by his will, and whose ideas will come and go at his command. No man will be found in whose mind airy notions do not sometimes tyrannize, and force him to hope or fear beyond the limits of sober probability. All power of fancy over reason is a degree of insanity; but while this power is such as we control and repress, it is not visible to others nor considered as any depravation of the mental faculties. It is not pronounced madness but when it becomes ungovernable, and apparently influences speech or action."

"To indulge the power of fiction, and send imagination out upon the wing, is often the sport of those who delight too much in silent speculation. When we are alone we are not always busy; the labor of exegitation is to violent too last long; the ardor of inquiry will sometimes give way to idleness or satiety." He who has nothing external that can divert him must find pleasure in his own thoughts, and must conceive himself what he is; not; for he is pleased with what he is. He then expatiates in boundless futurity, and culs from all imaginable conditions that which for the present moment he should most desire, amuses his desire with impossible enjoyments, and confers upon his pride unattainable dominion. The mind dances from scene to scene, unites all pleasures in all combinations and riots in delights which nature and fortune, with all their bounty, cannot bestow.

"In time some particular train of ideas fixes the attention; all other intellectual gratifications are rejected; the mind, in weariness or leisure, recurs constantly to the favorite conception, and feasts on the luscious falsehood whenever she is offended with the bitterness of truth. By degrees the reign of fancy is confirmed; she grows first impudent, and in time despotic. Then fictions begin to operate as realities; false opinions fasten upon the mind, and life passes in dreams of rapture or of anguish."

"This, sir, is one of the dangers of solitude, which the hermit has confessed not always to promote goodness, and the astronomer's misery has proved to be not always propitious to wisdom."

"I will no more," said the favorite, "imagine myself the queen of Abyssinia. I have often spent the hours, which the princess gave to my own disposal, in adjusting ceremonies and regulating the court; I have repressed the pride of the powerful, and granted the petitions of the poor; I have built new palaces in more happy situations, planted groves upon the tops of mountains, and have exulted in the benefice of royalty, till, when the princess entered, I had almost forgotten to bow down before her."

"And I," said the princess, "will not allow myself any more to play the shepherdess in my waking dreams. I have often soothed my thoughts with the quiet and innocence of pastoral employments; till I have, in my chamber, heard the winds whistle and the sheep bleat; sometimes freed the lamb entangled in the thicket, and sometimes with my crook encountered the wolf. I have a dream like that of the village maids, which I put on to help my imagination, and a pipe, on which I play softly, and suppose myself followed by my flock."

"I will confess," said the prince, "an indulgence of fantastic delights more dangerous than yours. I have frequently endeavored to image the possibility of a perfect government, by which all wrong should be restrained, all vice reformed, and all the subjects preserved in tranquillity and innocence. This thought produced innumerable schemes of reformation, and dictated many useful regulations and salutary edicts. This has been the sport, and sometimes the labor, of my solitude; and I start, when I think of how little anguish I once supposed the death of my father and my brothers."

"Such," says Inlæc, "are the effect of visionary schemes. When we first form them we know them to be absurd, but familiarize them by degrees, and in time lose sight of their folly."

CHAPTER XLV.

They Discourse with an Old Man.

The evening was now far passed, and they rose to return home. As they walked along the bank of the Nile, delighted with the beams of the moon quivering on the water, they saw at a small distance an old man, whom the prince had often heard in the assembly of the sages. "Yonder," said he, "is one whose years have calmed his passions, but not clouded his reason; let us close the disquisitions of the night by inquiring what are his sentiments of his own state, that we may know whether youth alone is to struggle with vexation, and whether any better hope remains for the latter part of life."

Here the sage approached and saluted them. They invited him to join their walk, and prattle awhile, as acquaintances that had unexpectedly met one another. The old man was cheerful and talkative, and the way seemed short in his company. He was pleased to find himself not disregarded, accompanied them to their house, and at the prince's request, entered with them. They placed him in the seat of honor, and set wine and conserves before him.

GRAPHIC ACCOUNT OF A STRANGE CATASTROPHE.

THE FLOODING OF BELLE PLAINE.

The artisan well at Belle Plaine, Ind., that burst and nearly flooded the town Tuesday, continues to discharge 5,000,000 gallons daily, but all danger of an overflow has been averted. Thus far noboody has been able to suggest a mode of complete relief. The well is surrounded by strangers who have journeyed long distances to witness the wonderful phenomena. The probable source of the immense flow of water is undetermined, says a special to the New York Times, it is a mineral water. Large pieces of wood and cattail coal, charcoal, together with iron pyrites and all varieties of stone are thrown out by the flood. The damage direct to the
